A cell line, G1, was derived from a spleen of an African green monkey (AGM) that had received a split-dose of HSV-1. The cell line was transformed with a Kirsten murine sarcoma virus (Ki-MSV) and studied for both the proliferation characteristics and the properties of an antiviral infection. The G1 cells exhibited a stable phenotype and retained the ability to produce interleukin-2. The cells showed a clear growth response with increasing doses of lymphokines and phytohemagglutinin (PHA) and proliferated well to proliferative factors produced by human lymphocytes. The G1 cells proliferated slowly in vitro (10 to 14 population doublings per 2 months), but this was not due to senescence. The cells were also able to proliferate in vitro in the presence of exogenous serum or growth factors but failed to adhere to plastic in a serum-free culture. Both in vivo and in vitro studies demonstrated that the cell line was resistant to a wide range of herpesviruses, and the cell line was able to recognize a number of herpesviruses. Of particular interest was the capacity of this cell line to recognize and respond to HSV-1 and to inhibit the replication of HSV-1 in vitro. G1 was tested for its ability to block the growth of other viruses by inhibition of infectivity assays. The G1 cells demonstrated antiviral activity against HSV-2 and human cytomegalovirus. The characterization of G1 for both proliferation and antiviral studies will allow for the further characterization of AGM T lymphocytes and the development of the monolayer system into an antiviral model for human herpesviruses.Zhao Quanzhen Zhao Quanzhen or Sebei was a Chinese Buddhist monk, poet, musician and artist of the 15th century.
